

ONLINE MASTER OF ARTS ADULT LEARNING AND DEVELOPMENT

Adult learning has the power to literally change lives. As business and organizations place more emphasis on a well-educated workforce, adult literacy, training in the workplace, and postsecondary education are becoming critical to meeting employers' needs and ensuring a high quality of life for employees. This is leading to an increased demand for effective adult education professionals who understand the needs and characteristics of adult learners. Northwestern State University's 100% online Master of Arts in Adult Learning and Development emphasizes practice-based learning grounded in adult learning theory to prepare educators for careers in corporate training centers, online education, postsecondary education, community education centers, and many other fields involving adult learning. NSU's Master of Arts program provides the solution to your career goals with two available concentrations: Adult and Workforce Development and e-Learning. The e-Learning concentration prepares educators to design, develop, and deliver online learning experiences, while Adult and Workforce Development emphasizes adult learning in the workplace, continuing professional learning, adult basic education, and postsecondary preparation for employment.
